If These Walls Could Talk . . .

They do. When clients enter your office, it talks to them. It tells them what kind of person you are, what kind of professional you are and what - if anything - you have in common with them. In short, your office says volumes about you. You can use it to your advantage, turning your office into a powerful sales tool.

Turning Your Office into a Powerful Sales Tool

Invesco wholesalers visit thousands of investment offices each year and have accumulated some inside information on how Financial Professionals are turning their offices into powerful sales tools. The successful tactics have been distilled down to six categories, or stories, your office should tell.

Is Your Waiting Room “Depressurized?”

Your waiting room can set the tone for the relationship. When clients find sales literature, promotions and prospectuses in your waiting room, they may get the notion that you are a high-pressure salesperson - not a Financial Professional. Think about “depressurizing” your waiting room to establish a long-term relationship rather than a short-term sale.

Yes  No

- Literature
  Is the waiting room filled with sales literature, brochures and prospectuses, or is it appointed in ways to make the clients feel relaxed and at home?

- Greeting
  Do your assistants greet clients when they walk in? One Financial Professional has his assistants stand up and greet clients by name when they enter the office - particularly older clients. It shows respect and an appreciation for them as people not just customers.

- Investment Strategies
  Does it illustrate investment solutions? One Financial Professional who focuses in college saving plans displays graduation pictures of her clients’ children - students that have benefited from her college investment plans.

- Activities
  Does it give them something to do? One Financial Professional has cookbooks and an old copier in his waiting room so that his clients can copy their favorite recipes. Others have office-putting greens for their clients to use, or televisions for their clients to watch. Activities not only make the office visit more enjoyable, but also keep clients occupied if you’re running late.

- Refreshments
  Do you offer homemade cookies, coffee, tea or juice?
Is Your Office Personalized?

What does your office say about you as a person and as a professional? Financial Professionals are careful about what and where they place items representing their family, hobbies, education, and awards. Do you have the following five topics covered?

Yes  No

- Family Pictures
  Are they positioned where they can be seen by you and your clients?

- Hobbies and Collections
  Do you display your hobbies and interests? These not only reveal something about you to your clients, but also help establish common interests and personal connections. In addition, they can be the basis of an investment metaphor. One Financial Professional displays pictures of hot air balloons—a great metaphor for managing risk. Another Financial Professional displays a collection of model-size farm tractors—many of his clients are retired farmers.

- Community Involvement and Charitable Contributions
  Clients notice and respect this. Show them that you have strong values and pride in your community. Display thank you letters and membership certificates to neutral organizations consistent with your firm values and guidelines for political/charitable/community involvement. These should clearly reflect your personal membership, not on behalf of the firm.

- Education
  Do you display books, degrees, diplomas and continuing education certificates?

- Awards
  Your awards should not appear to be at the center of attention - display these in your waiting room, not in your office.
Does the Office Reinforce Your Business Message?

Yes   No

- Is it Organized and Clean?
  How are you able to organize their finances if your office is disorganized with clutter and piles?

- Does it Establish You as a Wall Street Professional?
  A simple bulls & bears statue or public offering tombstone to reinforce that you are their connection to Wall Street.

- Does it Reinforce Your Commitment to Privacy?
  Can you be trusted with the confidentiality of their financial records? Are there open client files, appointment calendars and financial records in view of others? Are your clients asked to write checks in view of others?

- Spectator Sports
  Do you have sports memorabilia in your office? A signed jersey, baseball or football? An autographed picture? Most teams have websites with product sales. Or you could donate to an amateur league, local team or to the Olympics and display evidence of donation.

- Participatory Sports
  Do you have pictures, awards or some other evidence of your own athletic achievements?

- Exercise/Fitness
  Display local walking/jogging route map; a fitness routine for active seniors, a schedule of classes from the local YMCA.

- Television/Movies/Plays
  Playbill, classic movie poster or a movie review guide in the waiting room.

- Computers/Home Electronics
  State-of-the-art software or hardware that you can quickly demonstrate for your clients.

- Literature
  Display the current New York Times “Best Seller” list. Let clients borrow from your collection of books in your waiting room.

- Cooking
  A binder of family recipes or recipes clipped from newspapers and magazines.

- House & Home
  Original art, antique furniture, a flower arrangement or a decorator’s book in the waiting room.

- Automobiles
  One advisor has a reconditioned 1968 sports car parked out back that he shows his clients – it not only helps to establish common ground with car enthusiasts, but also helps them reminisce about what they were doing 44 years ago and what goals and aspirations they may have long forgotten.
Does Your Office Help Mine for Goals?

Biographers and therapists often use reminiscence tools and memory starters to help their clients recall relevant information. These can be stories, pictures, paintings, and other visual or narrative props. Financial Professionals can use similar tools to help their clients recall goals, aspirations and fears that might be relevant to the financial plan.

Yes  No

- Travel
  Travel brochures, vacation destinations and realty guides can help clients recall goals. One Financial Professional has a floor-to-ceiling size map of the world in his waiting room. Some clients like to find the cities they have traveled to on the map.

- Education
  Place a local college course guide or a park district catalog on your waiting room coffee table.

- Career Listings
  Display the AARP* catalog on careers, contact a local recruiter for a list of second careers for people over 50.

- New Business Magazines
  Display entrepreneur publications or local articles featuring local residents who have started their own businesses.

- Guide to Retirement Spots
  Retirement destinations are an important piece of the financial plan, yet most people under 55 have not given it much thought. Help them along, with a list from the travel channel or travel and leisure magazines on their favorite retirement spots, or display brochures on nationwide retirement locations.

Does Your Office Illustrate Investment Concepts?

Some financial Professionals are adding illustrations and office props to help illustrate investment principles and concepts with their clients. Invesco Consulting makes many of these available in the Office Stories Catalog. Do you have any sales assists?

Yes  No

- Long-term Market
  Using props that describe or show the long-term growth of investments since 1929 can help Financial Professionals explain the long term markets and the differences between equities and fixed income.

- Today’s Market – Levels and Yields
  Some advisors use computer screens, chalkboards or eraser boards to give investors a top-line view of investment benchmarks.

- Office Props as Investment Analogies or Metaphors
  Anything in your office can be used as an analogy or metaphor in communicating investment concepts to clients, such as the four legs on a chair to illustrate diversification and balance, a plant to illustrate the need for ongoing care of investment portfolios, or a sports collectible to illustrate the need for “coaching” in the investment process.
Is Your Office “Age-justed” for Seniors?

Here are some simple, inexpensive adjustments you can make.

Yes  No

- Background Noise
  Is background noise kept to a minimum? Are CNN, radio, office machines, ringing telephones, outside noise, etc. making it difficult for clients to hear you? If they make calls from your office, does the phone have hearing amplification?

- Office Lighting
  Is the lighting bright and indirect where the client sits? Are your stairs, doorways and closets well-lit? Consider installing 3-way light bulbs in reading areas.

- Furniture
  Are chairs and sofas firm and high so that clients can easily get up? Seats should be higher than 17-18 inches, not slanted back or sinking down. Shelves and literature racks should be higher than 27 inches. Consider lowering shelves and coat hangers to 3 inches below standard height.

- Literature
  Does investment literature minimize gloss (avoiding glare)? Is it legible (at least 12 point font, minimize italics and reverse type)? Does it maximize contrast and minimize yellows? Does it lead with emotion? Consider ordering literature for the waiting room from senior citizens organizations.

- Doors
  Are your doors easy to open? Try opening the door with just your pinky and ring finger and avoid door knobs in favor of door levers (easier for persons with arthritis). If you can't open the door, consider fixing it or asking your assistant to meet persons with certain disabilities or with limited mobility at the door when they arrive.

- Office Signs—Large and Well Lit
  Can clients with visual impairments read external and internal signs at eye level?

- Chair Height
  Your chair should not be higher than clients out of respect.

- Office Hazards
  Is common space hazard-free? Narrow aisles, wastebaskets, cords, overly plush carpets, scatter rugs, doormats, plants and stairs can be dangerous for those with limited mobility. Hallways and doorways should be at least 35 inches wide. Stairs and steps should be deep enough to hold the entire foot.
StorySelling Books

Book: StorySelling For Financial Advisors: How Top Producers Sell

Learn what makes a client trust you to be their financial advisor. Put the power of storytelling into selling financial products. The authors explain the process of making these intuitive connections, then translate their findings into understandable and practical strategies that any financial professional can use. They present actual stories from some of the greatest “storysellers” of all time that can help financial pros tap into the “gut reaction” of different types of clients. Includes special topics on communicating to women, the 50+ market, and the affluent.

Book: The Financial Professional’s StoryBook

The StoryBook is a collection of more than 200 engaging analogies, anecdotes, and metaphors that will help you simplify Wall Street jargon for your clients. These stories were gathered and refined from hundreds of financial advisors, wholesalers, and other professionals who excel at StorySelling. The wide range of topics include:

- The value of a good financial advisor
- Diversification
- Equity investing
- Understanding risks
- The benefits of a comprehensive financial plan
